About ESOSA: Who doesn't dream of being rich and famous? Especially when you come from a poverty-stricken background. Pretty, sixteen-year-old Esosa, living with her widowed mother in an African slum is no exception. Raised as an obedient hard-working daughter, in spite of her lack of education, she helps eke out the family finances by being the dogsbody in an upmarket hairdressing salon in Benin City. Her mother, also working full time for a pittance, struggles to feed, clothe and house her children, but battles on stoically.

Then one day, out of the blue, Esosa is approached with the offer of a modelling career in Europe. It's her lifelong dream come true. Her mother smells a rat, but Esosa, desperate to clear her mother's debts and give her a better quality of life, refuses to listen, and with her mother at work, she sneaks out of the house to begin her new career.

Very soon, Esosa discovers that her mother was right to be suspicious, as her journey (both in a physical and mental sense) veers far from the straight and narrow road she thought would lead to riches.

Her life quickly becomes one of constant anguish, pain and fear as she encounters a never ending stream of slave traders and lowlife criminals; each one out for their own selfish ends at any cost.

Can Esosa survive? And if so, what then? Will she ever see her mother and little brother ever again?
